Prologue

In a context of dramatic changes for international cooperation, South-South cooperation steps in as a different method of cooperation to the traditional North-South, as an innovative expression of solidarity among developing countries, as a hope for a better world and, to some extent, as a new ideology for its approach to the world and its interpretation of the relationship among peoples. With its rich heterogeneity, its challenges and wisdom, South-South Cooperation is a reality in permanent evolution.

For those who work in international cooperation everyday – decision makers, technicians, assistants- it is important to reflect on what we do and why we do it. In case of South-South Cooperation, this involves the motivations, principles and values that inspire and guide it, linked in turn to historical structures and political processes of global and regional nature.

Hoping to add to this reflection, the Ibero-American Programme for the Strengthening of South-South Cooperation –whose mission is to enhance South-South Cooperation in the Ibero-American frame promoting its values and principles, so that it efficiently contributes to development- has proposed the paper “Chronology and History of South-South Cooperation: a contribution from Ibero-America”, presented here.

This document chronologically lists and describes the main features of almost 200 events at an international level, that have marked the South-South Cooperation Agenda in the last 60 years, from its origin, as Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries (TCDC) and up to 2013. The study systematizes not only those forums in which South-South Cooperation has been analysed and explicitly debated, but also those events that do not mention South-South Cooperation in their agenda or in their conclusions, but have had key consequences in its historical evolution.

The remarkable increase of the number of South-South Cooperation related events and processes registered in the last decades, certifies the growing political importance that it has achieved through forums and debates on international cooperation.

Therefore, we hope this paper shows part of the rich history of this type of cooperation and becomes a referential document for cooperation stakeholders, to acknowledge and value the role of South-South Cooperation from its history and in the present global scenery of international cooperation.

1. Introduction

Despite the fact that the “South-South Cooperation” concept has been only recently used and endorsed, it had already been introduced as an expression of solidarity among developing countries for decades. At first it was called Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries (TCDC) and it was closely related to its counterpart, Economic Cooperation among Developing Countries (ECDC). However, its concept and its characteristics have evolved in many different international, regional and bilateral forums, as well as within each country.

This paper responds to the need to identify those governmental events that have marked the evolution and the debate of what we know and label as South-South Cooperation nowadays.

This paper will list, in chronological order, the regional and international events that have marked South-South Cooperation Agenda, from the 40’s, when the Arab League first emerged, made up of seven developing countries of the Middle East, and up to the I Summit of the Latin American and Caribbean Community (CELAC) held in January 2013. The paper will not only present the events in which South-South Cooperation has been analysed and discussed explicitly, but also those events that do not mention South-South Cooperation in their agenda nor in their conclusions, but which have had key consequences for its historical evolution.

As seen in graph n.1, the chronological layout of the 295 registered events is not homogeneous. Looking at how the forums are distributed throughout the decades, we observe an exponential growth of the number of forums in time. There were four forums in the 50’s, no less than 22 in the 70’s, and already 32 in the 90’s. Nevertheless, it is from the year 2000 that the proliferation of forums becomes more evident, 83 were conducted in the first decade of the 21st century, while 114 have already been held in only these last three years (2011-12-13).

On the other hand, we believe the situation of South-South Cooperation has been affected all along by many events, directly or indirectly. The events that we have taken into account for the article can be seen in diagram n.1.

Types of influencing events in the evolution of South-South Cooperation

SOURCE: prepared by the author.

As shown in the diagram, we have considered the following criteria in order to typify the events:

- a) On the one hand, we mention the events more closely related to South-South Cooperation, such as those derived from international cooperation in general and those related to intraregional relationships in one same continent.
- b) On the other hand, we mention the events related to the historical evolution that have influenced international relations, events related to the financial access of developing countries or to the integration and partnership processes among different regions and countries. Therefore, mainly for the first decades of the study, the focus of the compiled events is often another type of process, apparently external to South-South Cooperation, as could be regional integration, the processes of the incorporation of economies to international trade, or the strategic partnerships to reach stronger positions on various international forums, especially when dealing with the United Nations (UN).

In the last years, particularly from 2010, the number of registered events grows drastically, not only due to the acquired importance of South-South Cooperation in the international agenda, but also to a greater access to information and registration of data, due to new technologies. Lack of registration has made it impossible, in some cases, to analyse South-South activities that surely happened during the first years of our research.

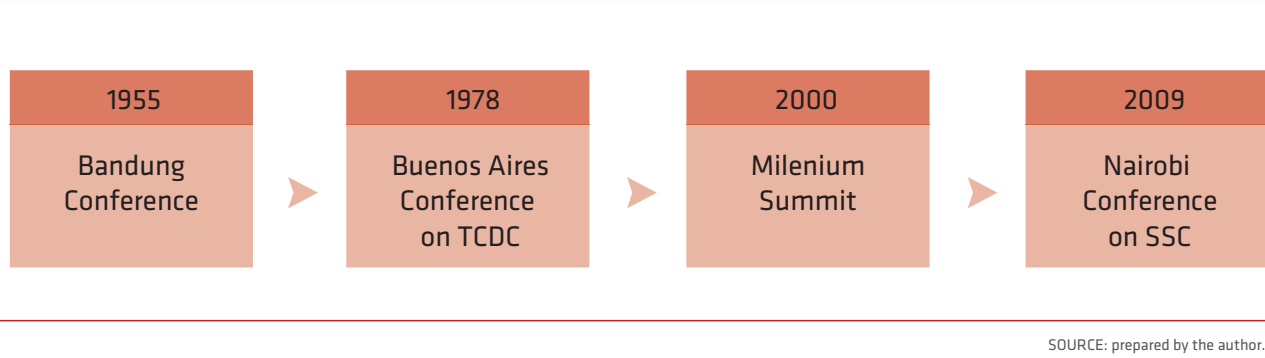

Nowadays, almost every forum, dialogue space and event related to international cooperation makes reference to South-South Cooperation. Many activities are directed to improve the systematization, classification and characterization of this type of cooperation. Presently there may be a lack of an international and global forum specific on South-South Cooperation, a forum where its actors become the main characters. However, given the dramatic growth of South-South Cooperation, it may not be long before this forum emerges.

Certainly, solidarity among developing countries can be traced back for centuries. We have chosen the end of the II World War as the milestone from where to start the compilation and listing of events. We consider that moment an inflection point in international cooperation, as well as in the political, trading and economic context for the decades to come. Many of the registered events may not have had relevant consequences or may not have boosted South-South cooperation, but the fact they were held, together with their often poor results, are proof that there were many attempts to launch South-South Cooperation during the almost 70 years covered in our analysis, and they show the existence of a political ever-lasting will of collaboration among developing countries.

However, the evolution of South-South Cooperation and the execution of specific events cannot be understood without a closer look into the historical context of the world at that period. The geopolitical international reorganization after the II World War, the context of the Cold War, the opening of international trade, the decolonization processes, the Latin American debt crisis in the 80's, the Southeast Asian crisis at the end of the 90's, the globalization or the current economic crisis that affects mainly the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) countries, all of them are processes that explain the present situation of international cooperation and, in our case, of South-South cooperation in particular, shaping its evolution.

Division in four periods for the analysis

The different events are presented in chronological order, thus it is important to cross-analyse the type of forums dealing with the main topic, also from a regional point of view, if it exists, for the different geographical regions of the developing countries.

The 70 years of the study have been divided in various periods to be able to analyse the historical series. Four main events considered milestones in South-South cooperation have been selected. The date of each one divides our series in four periods. These four periods are illustrated in diagram n. 2.

- c) The first period starts with the Bandung Conference (Asian-African Summit) and finishes in the Buenos Aires Conference, with the approval of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action (BAPA). The Plan gathers some of the guidelines that constitute the grounds of South-South cooperation.
- d) The second period spans from 1978 to 2000, year of the Millennium Summit, with the setting of the Millennium Development Goals (MDG), and the prompting of efforts against poverty.
- e) The third period covers the next nine years, up until the second main international conference on South-South Cooperation, on the occasion of the 30+1 anniversary of the Buenos Aires Conference: the Nairobi Conference on South-South Cooperation.
- f) The fourth period covers the last three years, up until the First CELAC Summit, in January 2013.

The increasing number of events for each period is observed, in spite of the disparity of years covered by each of them (see graph n.2). More than twice the number of events took place in the last period (115) compared to the first one (46). Furthermore, while the first period makes reference to more than 30 years of history, the last period lasts scarcely more than three years.

The list of events is included in the annex. It has been listed in chronological order and divided into the same four periods stated for the cross-analysis. For each event, four types of information are synthesised:

- g) The year of the event. Months are also mentioned in case more than one registration entry for the same year is listed.
- h) The name and place of the event.
- i) The sector and significance of the event.
- j) A brief summary about the issues addressed at the event, or about its conclusions and consequences related to South-South Cooperation. This summary is taken from public and official documents available for consultation in the various collaborating agencies.

2. First period: 1945 – 1978

The Bandung Conference is the milestone event of the period. However, the date that marks the beginning of the analysis is the end of the II World War, hence two previous events to the Bandung Conference should be included. Firstly, the founding of the Arab League in 1945, that together with the independence processes taking place in those same years in the Middle East, can be regarded as a step towards collaboration among developing countries. Secondly, the Colombo Plan (1950), introduced in seven countries of the Commonwealth in Southeast Asia, which still prevails.

46 events with significant influence on South-South Cooperation have been selected for this period that covers 33 years.

2.1. Historical Context

It is in the Bandung Conference in 1955, with 29 African and Asian participating states¹, that the counties of the South launch a protest movement. This movement will go on for decades and marks the beginning of partnerships in developing countries in order to unify their voice. It will become the Non Aligned Movement (NAM) promoted in the Belgrade Summit six years later. This event is motivated not only by the Cold War context that defines this period, but also by the great number of processes of decolonization in these first years. More than 30 countries of the Sub-Saharan Africa became independent, and so did many nations from the Caribbean. The countries call for world peace and disarmament, and for the reduction of the gaps between developing and developed countries in industrial, economic and agricultural fields².

This first partnership process of the NAM comes with the founding, in the United Nations and particularly in the UN Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) in 1964, of the 77 Group (G77), the largest group of developing countries inside the UN. The G77 aimed at reaching a joint position to set the standards for international trade, in order to achieve a greater development of its own countries and benefit from better and fairer conditions. Moreover, the group was considered from the start a means to launch cooperation among developing countries³. Prevailing in the present, it meets every year prior to the UN General Assembly in order to agree on a joint position in some of the issues.

The NAM, as well as the G77, has been the promoter of TCDC and ECDC, both working closely together in the beginning of the experiences in developing countries, due to the correlation both had with international trade. At first, the NAM's plans of action on economic cooperation included TCDC, but later TCDC untied from NAM and asserted its own identity⁴. Given the great number of countries that take part in both forums, the entities have tried to coordinate their complaints and claims all along.

It is with the establishment of these two main forums of political cooperation that the petition of a New International Economic Order (NIEO) by southern countries starts to build up. This petition will be heard at the UN Extraordinary General Assembly in 1974, in which the Declaration and the Action Program on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order were endorsed.

Cooperation among developing countries and the demand for more support from developed countries were included in this Plan⁵. During the following years developing countries kept on claiming, reaching joint positions and taking measures to defend its NIEO, pointing at a fairer global economic order, one that would give more importance to developing countries and that would condemn uneven international trade and the plundering of transnational corporations in their own countries⁶.

TCDC separation from ECPC as a full entity within the UN comes with the formation of a working team in charge of the analysis of this modality in 1972. The establishment of that team is the first step in the UN to claim TCDC in multilateral forums. The demand for TCDC will reach its peak at the UN Conference on Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries that took place in Buenos Aires in August 1978.

2.2 Debate forums on South-South cooperation

Multilateral forums are the best feature of the first period, particularly the ones related to the UN Organization. It is in these wide spaces of debate where partnership processes in the south start and lead to an explicit and implicit cooperation among the countries involved. It is more like a means to strengthen the relationship and solidarity between two countries than the result of a process of identification of abilities and needs, with well set developing goals. The unmistakable indicator is the culmination of this period in the Conference on Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, a milestone in this field, with the approval of the BAPA in September 1978, a document that will become referential for South-South Cooperation.

Relationships among developing countries are closely linked to the dynamics of integration of these countries in international trade. Due to the great influence and importance of the world powers on the various regulatory processes carried out in the GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade) and in the UNCTAD, developing countries found in the association and in the joint positions the only ways to inflict a real pressure, and thus meet beneficial (or less pernicious) agreements in tariffs for their own economies.

It is very interesting to analyse the foundation, in this period, of a great number of funds and financial institutions that were –or will be after the years- essential financial resources for South-South Cooperation. In the year 1961, the Kuwait Fund for Arab Economic Development was set, and it became the first support fund for developing countries created by one of these same countries⁷. After that, regional banks emerged and have, over the years, taken on a south-south approach). The Inter-American Development Bank (IDB) was the pioneer of this kind. At the same time, funds that allowed access to credit and financial assistance to developing countries originated. It is worth noting the Middle East region in this matter, where the petroleum peak ensured great foreign currency revenue. This revenue was used for the concession of loans to developing countries through various funds and banks. The first petroleum crisis in 1973 was the consequence of an increase of oil prices. This increase meant the start of various financial mechanisms by oil exporters. Some of those mechanisms are the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development (1971), the Abu Dhabi Fund for Development (1971), the Arab Fund for Technical Assistance to African Countries (1974), the Saudi Fund for Development (1974), the Arab Bank for Development in Africa (1975) and the OPEC Fund for International Development (1976).

2.3. Regional Analysis

All these processes of political interactions in an international level find their replica within a regional level, where some joint positions were also reached. The Charter of Algiers, endorsed by the G77 in 1967, was already the result of three regional meetings in Tequendama (Colombia), Bangkok (Thailand) and Algiers (Algiers).

Integration processes, usually of an economic nature, are also very important. Such processes started at a regional level, many of which still prevail. These are a feedback mechanism to South-South Cooperation. Regional integration prompts South-South Cooperation, which at its turn strengthens the relationships among countries, hence favouring regional integration as well (see diagram n.3).

The Andean Community (CAN)⁸ and the Caribbean Community (CARICOM), from the late 60's and early 70's, are two of the first integration processes initiated in the Latin America and Caribbean regions, both operational nowadays. Others, such as the Latin American Free Trade Association (LAFTA), can be pointed out as the predecessors of greater processes. The integration and association in the Latin American and Caribbean region is promoted also at the Alta Gracia Meeting, where the region is presented as a compact unit holding a joint position before a UN forum (UNCTAD).

As for Africa, it became essential for these countries to have access to credit. This was provided by the specific funds for the region, created by Arab countries, and by the establishment of institutions such as the East African Development Bank (1967), the African Development Fund (1972) and the West African Development Bank (1973). Two facts worth noticing are the creation of the Economic Community Of West African States (ECOWAS) and the Organisation of African Unity, which was (and still is under the name of African Union), the greatest and most important organisation in Africa. Another historical event marking the evolution of South-South Cooperation in the continent is the first Chinese incursion in the field of construction, during the 70's, to build the railway between Tanzania and Zambia.

The first South-South Cooperation activities in the Asian region take place in Thailand and its neighbouring countries. Other states such as India (with the establishment of its programme of technical cooperation) or China (which starts cooperating with Africa) stand out as main providers of technical cooperation. The regional integration processes result in the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN), a proof of the efforts to set partnerships within the region. The start of the Asian Development Bank (ADB) in 1965 granted access to credit in the region.

3. Second period: 1978-2000

This second period is delimited by the end of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries in Buenos Aires (September 1978) and the Millennium Summit in the UN headquarters in September 2000. There are 54 events gathered in this period, all of them of special relevance to South-South Cooperation.

3.1. Historical Context

All historical facts of the period are tainted by the deterioration and recrudescence of the end of the Cold War, with the subsequent transition from a bipolar international context to the hegemony of the USA. There were several conflicts in the Middle East region, such as the Iran – Iraq war (1980-1988), the war in Lebanon (1982) and the Gulf war (1990-1991). It is also the time of the Latin American debt crisis, a hard blow to the region in the 80's, and the crisis in Southeast Asia in 1997, affecting neighbouring countries but damaging the sub-region above all.

As for foreign trade, the countries of the South saw their expectations unfulfilled since the beginning of GATT rounds, in 1947, to negotiate on tariff agreements. This is why, in 1976, negotiations processes resulted in the General System of Trade Preferences among Developing Countries (GSTP). Even so, it was not until the eighth round of the GATT, the Uruguay Round (1986), when the decision of launching GSTP in 1988 was made. The Uruguay Round has been the greatest negotiation ever in the history of trade. It lasted much longer than expected due to its controversial negotiation issues, up until 1993. Some of the key issues discussed in the round were trade in services, investment deregulation and intellectual property rights⁹. The protection it tried to apply restricted in turn the spreading of new technologies and scientific advances, affecting basically the south countries that considered technological development as an essential pillar for development. All of this motivated the formation of the GSTP as an alternative framework to GATT (and to World Trade Organization nowadays) for trade among developing countries. Moreover, it meant a new attempt to globally claim the NIEO. At present, the GSTP is made up of 47 countries, all of them members of the G77 (that being one of the premises). Its functioning is based on the principle of mutual benefit, taking into account the levels of development and trade needs of the member countries.

Similarly, in 1987, a new commission originates within the NAM, the South Commission. This Commission was chaired by the former president of Tanzania and keen defender of developing countries, Julius Nyerere; its secretary-general was the current Indian prime minister, Manmohan Singh. The South Commission looked for alternatives after the failure of the NIEO project at the end of the North-South Conference in Cancun in 1981.¹⁰ The Commission met several times between 1987 and 1990, producing many recommendations for the south countries, set and gathered in the document Challenge to the South. Its release in 1990 resulted in the establishment of the South Centre, an intergovernmental think-tank settled in Switzerland to support south countries. It was an attempt to provide a solid organisational base to the movement of developing countries, built on something else rather than just forums and political meetings.

At last, already in the year 2000, the First Summit of the South takes place in La Habana, within the G77 framework, to deal with issues closely related to globalisation and development. South-South Cooperation is defined as an instrument for development and reinforcement of economic independence, and it comprises TCDC as well as ECDC.

Regarding conceptualisation, it is at the beginning of the 80's that the expression South-South Cooperation becomes common. The use of this term was mainly promoted by the academy, as seen in several publications such as the articles «Beyond the slogan on South-South Cooperation»¹¹ (1980), «South-South Cooperation and Economic Order»¹² (1982), the Brandt Commission¹³ report: *Common Crisis North-South: Cooperation for World Recovery*¹⁴ (1983) and the book The Challenges of South-South Cooperation (1983)¹⁵. At a government level, the term is used in events such as the NAM Summit in 1983 (New Delhi) and the VI UNCTAD in Belgrade that same year. However, it is not until the following decade that the use of the expression is consolidated, coexisting in the meantime with the terms TCDC and ECDC.

3.2. Debate forums on South-South Cooperation

After the Buenos Aires Conference, there is a boosted progress towards a more institutionalized TCDC. Evidence of it are the inauguration of the UN High Level Committee on the Review of the TCDC (1980), the start of the Intergovernmental Coordination Committee on Economic Cooperation among Developing Countries (1981), the launching of the South Commission (1986) and the establishment of the Centre of NAM Technical South-South Cooperation in Indonesia (1995).

Regarding the forum typology, there is an increase of more specialised forums on TCDC and ECDC, this time independently from other forums with many other political, trading and strategy issues that made the topic of interest often blurry. At the same time, the separation between TCDC and ECDC becomes more pronounced, with clearly different spaces for each one, even though they are still closely linked together in the debate. The High Level Conference on ECDC in 1981 and the formation of the G15 within the NAM are examples of this. The G15 is a group of developing countries acting as the main political arm of the NAM, it provides the ground to discuss joint positions on the global situation, and it promotes economic development through South-South Cooperation.

As for the TCDC's link to ECDC in the UN, TCDC becomes its own entity after the Buenos Aires Conference. Proof of it is the founding of the UN High Level Committee on Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, a biannual forum of debate. Meanwhile, in other forums such as the G77 and the NAM, ECDC is still the priority and TCDC is just a mechanism to foster ECDC. As an example of it, in the Caracas Action Program on ECDC approved in 1981, TCDC is considered only as the tool for the establishment and launching of ECDC. This pattern is also evident in the NAM. A representation of the evolution of forums on ECDC and TCDC can be observed in diagram n. 4: it shows the way they become two independent full entities by creating their own specific forums and debates, and the fact that some TCDC spaces are understood as instruments for ECDC.

Regarding financial mechanisms, this period is distinguished by the introduction of specific South-South Cooperation funds. These are the UN Fund for South-South Cooperation (1995), the Special Multilateral Fund of the Inter-American Council for Integral Development (FEMCIDI) of the Organisation of American States (OAS) (1997) and also the Perez Guerrero Trust Fund (1983), a fund to finance technical cooperation projects among developing countries in the G77.

It is towards the end of this period that, besides the events to boost South-South Cooperation, other events related to South-South Cooperation exchange of experiences and ways to improve its functioning start taking place. Some examples are the Meeting on TCDC Pivotal Countries in Santiago de Chile in 1997 and the Forum on Cooperation Experiences organised by the Japanese government the following year.

3.3 Regional Analysis

In this period the Middle East region was characterised by its increasing instability. Conflicts such as the Iran-Iraq war (1980-1988) or the Gulf war (1990-1991) hit the region and provoked great rise in oil prices. However, none of these were an obstacle for the introduction of one of the best-known cooperation mechanisms, the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC)

There is also a process of institutionalisation of TCDC in Latin America through, for example, the formation of the Committee of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries and Regions in the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), the establishment of the Inter-American Council for the Integral Development (ICID) in the OAS and the SELA's appointment as the centre of information exchange on TCDC (1983). An annual meeting of the Directors of International Technical Cooperation will take place from 1987 onwards. Meanwhile, the integration processes of the region evolve into the formation of ALADI (1980), the Rio Group (1987), and MERCOSUR (1991), in spite of the debt crisis of the 80's. At the end of the period, one of the more active and important regional programmes of South-South Cooperation up to now is set: the Mesoamerican Cooperation Program (1998).

In the Asian continent, the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC) emerges in 1985, at present one of the most important organizations. The APEC (1989) is set and becomes one of the relevant forums on economic cooperation between Asia and the Pacific; its topic areas include economic and technical cooperation. Later, the financial crisis of 1997 in Southeast Asia is notable as a significant event, which also spread to other countries but mainly affected this region (Thailand, Malaysia, Philippines, Korea and Indonesia)¹⁶. Contrary to all expectations, this situation led to a greater awareness of the need of cooperation among the region states, in order to overcome the crisis. This was one of the premises that motivated the High Level Conference on Regional and Sub-regional Economic Cooperation among Developing Countries (Bali, 1998), within the G77. Proof of this renewed interest are the specification of the cooperation areas for the BIMST-EC in 1998 and the introduction of another interregional forum between Latin America and East Asia, the EALAF, the following year.

In the African continent the attempts of integration followed one another during the period, all of them emphasizing regional cooperation among member countries, such as the Conference of the South African Development Community (SADC, 1980), the African Economic Community (AEC, 1991), the West African Economic and Monetary Union (WAEMU, 1994), and the African Union (1999) to replace the Organisation of African Unity, the continent's most important political organisation involving the highest number of states.

4. Third period: 2000-2009

From the year 2000 the number of events increases dramatically. They are not so much influenced by a historical and political context as in the previous periods, but by the global effort and encouragement to work against poverty. The result is the tons of events related to international cooperation for development, evolving concurrently to South-South Cooperation.

80 events are registered for this 9 year period. At this point it is necessary to mention that the increase of the number of events for this period in our analysis is the direct consequence of a more efficient system of registration of such events.

4.1. Historical context

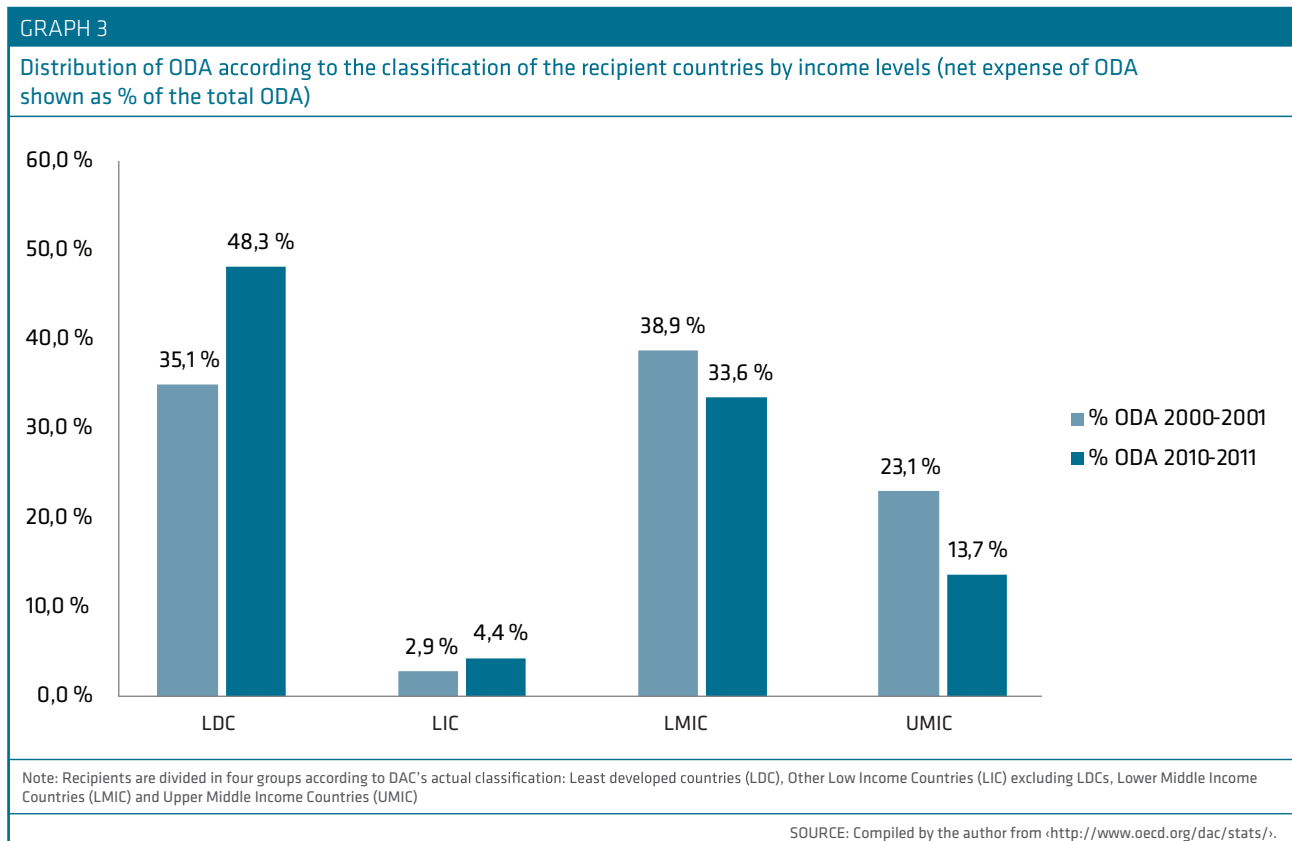

The economic situation of the period is a decisive factor. The first decade of the 21st century was a time of economic growth, for both developed and developing countries, at least until the financial crisis in 2008, which affected, above all, the economic world powers. These years of economic prosperity are reflected in the increase of the total Official Development Assistance (ODA), which had already doubled between 2000 and 2005¹⁷.

The Millennium Declaration (2000) and the Monterrey Consensus on Development Financing (2002) encouraged states to put their efforts into the most disadvantaged countries (mainly in the African continent). As a consequence, the increase of aid from that year onwards was channelled towards these countries. Therefore, during the 2000-2011 period, there is a lower percentage of participation of Middle Income Countries (MICs) as recipients of global ODA¹⁸ (and even harder cutbacks for

¹⁸ CEPAL: Middle Income Countries : a structural gap approach, Santiago de Chile: UN, 2012

Lower Middle Income Countries). There was a significant rise in ODA during those years, so a gross number would not show this cutback, but it can be noticed by looking at percentages, given that ODA has been mainly devoted to Low Income Countries and Least Developed Countries (LDC). As it can be seen in graph n. 3, if recipients of ODA are classified in four different groups (LDC, other Low-Income Countries, Lower Middle Income Countries and Upper Middle Income Countries) and the received ODA between the years 2000 and 2010 is quantified as a percentage of the total ODA for the same years, there is an increase of more than 10 percentage points for LDC countries, while there is a reduction for Middle Income Countries, even more so for the Upper Middle Income Countries.

All through this period, the South becomes heterogeneous, as countries called Least Developed Countries and those called Middle Income Countries are treated in different ways. Classifications and gradations of developing countries come into light. Emerging countries will play a differential role during this period, becoming essential providers of South-South Cooperation. South-South Cooperation is always present in the forums to introduce political dialogue, and so is its need to be promoted. This is the case of the pioneer IBSA forum in 2003, involving India, Brazil and South Africa, and the BRICS Summits (Brazil, Russia, India, China and South Africa) in 2009, which will be explained in the next chapter.

The debate on aid effectiveness initiated in 2003 in the First HLF (High Level Forum) on Harmonization held in Rome. In spite of the presence of South-South Cooperation in the previous meetings and debates, it was not considered in the First HLF, and would not be incorporated in a final document until the Third HLF in Accra 2008. The Accra Agenda for Action, approved to implement the Declaration of Paris, was the first document to take into account South-South Cooperation as one of the mechanisms that provided technical cooperation.

Regarding the use of the term South-South Cooperation, it is finally settled in this period after its popularization process in the previous decade. To all effects and in all forums, this term is used since the beginning of 2000. Nevertheless TCDC and ECDC are still mentioned as its implementation mechanisms, and broader concepts with reference to economic exchanges are still being applied.

4.2 Debate forums on South-South Cooperation

The integration of South-South Cooperation in almost all debates occurs during this period, even if, in some, it is only mentioned as a mere modality to consider. Its presence in international debates such as the one on sustainable development was already demonstrated in 2002 in the Johannesburg Summit, as well as in the debates on aid quality (2008) and on Development Financing (2002). It is also important to point out the way South-South Cooperation steps in forums such as the G8, encouraged by the participation of the G5 (Brazil, China, India, Mexico and South Africa) in the G8 Summit in 2007. The Heiligendamm Dialogue Process was launched in that Summit; it was a debate on several topics including development, prepared by countries of both groups. The G5 countries, all of them classified as emerging powers, will take South-South Cooperation into the G8 debate.

The reference to South-South Cooperation in the debate on aid effectiveness of the Accra Agenda for Action was a milestone. This fact inspired the formation of the Task-Team on South-South Cooperation (TT-SSC) in 2009, aiming at conducting a high level event on South-South Cooperation in 2010. Thus, several regional and international events were held, to compile successful South-South Cooperation experiences.

Alternatively, after this decade, traditional forums such as G77 or NAM make space for other more specific forums as the Conferences on Middle Income Countries and other regional and inter-regional forums. Even so, G77 and NAM are still two of the most active spaces for debate; they hold events of such magnitude as the South-South High Level Conference on Science and Technology (2002), the Second South Summit in Doha (2005) and the last meeting of the IFCC (another one expected by 2014)¹⁹, when the Yamoussoukro Consensus was passed. It should be highlighted that South-South Cooperation is a recurrent mechanism not only in Middle Income Countries forums, but also in Least Developed Countries forums. The activities of the UN Special Unit for South-South Cooperation intensify, dedicated to the exchange of experiences initiated in the Global South-South Development Expo in 2008. Two institutions should be pointed out: the World Bank, which starts its South-South Exchange Facility mechanism, and The Ibero-American General Secretariat (SEGIB), with its publishing of the first Report on South-South Cooperation in Ibero-America, pioneer on its attempt to organise South-South Cooperation of one whole region. All of this shows the interest to know not only what has been done but also how it has been done.

This interest and search for improvement of South-South Cooperation is also obvious in the seminars, workshops and events of a more specific nature, reduced in size, in order to learn and get to know in detail how South-South Cooperation works and operates in practice.

It is important to outline the events and actions held after the HLF of Accra (2008) and previous to the Nairobi Conference on South-South Cooperation (2009) on the 30+1 anniversary of BAPA. As an example, the UNDP Special Unit for South-South Cooperation Workshop, the workshop conducted in the framework of the Heiligendamm Process (February 2009) and the International Symposium on Triangular Cooperation organised by the European Union (EU) and Brazil (May 2009).

Meanwhile, the UN General Assembly in 2004 urged agencies and institutions to integrate programmes and support mechanisms of this kind of cooperation. Agencies such as UNDP, ILO, UNESCO, and WIPO had already shown interest on South-South Cooperation before.

19 G77+China Ministerial Declaration in its 37th Annual Meeting. Taken from <http://www.g77.org/doc/Declaration2013.htm>.

As for financial mechanisms, the ones created in this period are the result of a regional characterization. It is worth mentioning the South Fund for Development and Humanitarian Assistance.

4.3. Regional Analysis

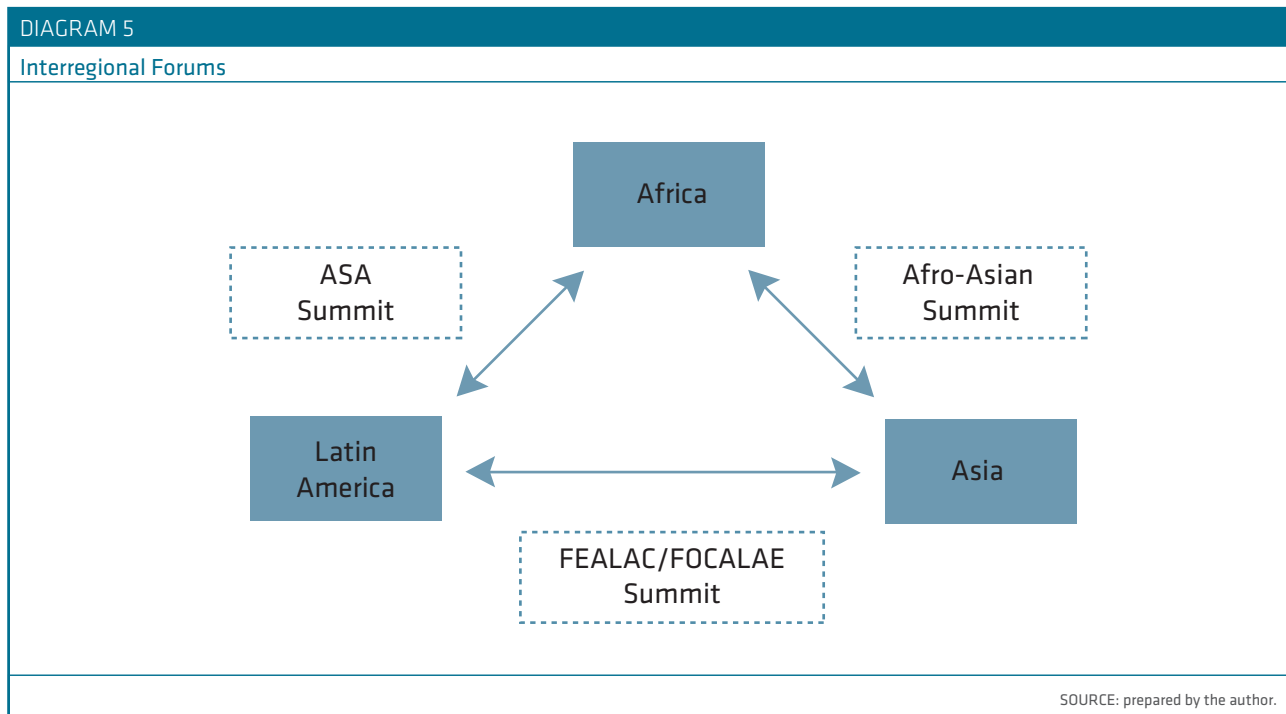

Three forums were held in this period, the three of them of a bilateral nature among developing regions; links were then built between the prime regions of development (Africa, Asia and Latin America). Firstly, on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the Bandung Conference in 2005, the Second Asia-Africa Summit was held, reinforcing a new strategic partnership between both regions. Then, the first Africa - South America Summit (ASA) took place the following year, and even if not yet at a presidential level, it had held meetings with ministers since 2001, the most important in 2007 in Brasilia. The forums that link the three regions are presented in diagram n. 5.

The bilateral forums held by China and India with the African continent are a plain demonstration of their will to cooperate with this continent. China was the pioneer, holding the first Ministerial Conference of the Forum on China-Africa Cooperation (FOCAC) in 2000. In 2006 it was time for the first Presidential Summit, which resulted in the Chinese agreement to double the aid to the continent within the three following years. India started its own forum with Africa in 2008.

China and India are not the only Asian countries participating in South-South Cooperation. The Shanghai Cooperation Organisation (SCO) started in 2001 and the Asia Cooperation Dialogue did so the following year. However, the consequences of the 1997 economic crisis that had affected some of the countries of the region were still noticeable at the beginning of this period.

In the Ibero-American region, a strong emerging position on Middle Income Countries in the international cooperation debate takes shape. The Ibero-American Summit in Salamanca produced a Special Communiqué on this category of countries. Here, a claim is put forward asking the international community to upkeep financial support for these countries and to avoid their exclusion. Furthermore, the need to establish new indicators that will consider other factors besides the Gross National Income is inserted in the Special Communiqué of the International Conferences on Middle Income Countries, promoted by Spain and El Salvador in the Ibero-American Summit in 2007. This same year, the first Report of South-South Cooperation in Ibero-America is published, which means a great support and encouragement for the foundation, a year later, of the Ibero-American Programme for the Strengthening of South-South Cooperation, pioneer in its area for its objectives at an international level. In the Ibero-American Summits of 2008 and 2009 (San Salvador and Estoril) the search of joint positions on international cooperation regarding Middle Income Countries continues, adding the issue of the heterogeneous reality of the Latin American region, and fostering the preparation of an Integral Action Plan for cooperation in these countries. All of this proves that the region is probably the most active one in the period, also demonstrated by the Venezuelan initiatives in 2005, Petrocaribe (2005) and the Bolivarian Alliance for the Americas (ALBA). ALBA is the framework of the ALBA Bank and the ALBA-Caribbean Fund, two basic financial mechanisms. The establishment of UNASUR in 2008 is important for integration processes, although its role as juridical entity will only start three years later.

5. Fourth period: 2009-2013

This fourth and last period, even if the shortest, is the most productive in number of events and activities related to South-South Cooperation. Hardly lasting for three years, the registered events rise to 115, and the forums of debate are uncountable. This renewed strength is explained not only by the final incorporation of South-South Cooperation in the Aid Effectiveness Agenda, but also by the politic and economic context of these last years. Forums focused on South-South Cooperation multiply; furthermore, the topic is also tackled in all events dealing with international cooperation or development issues. In these last years, events are better registered and are easily accessible to the different organisers.

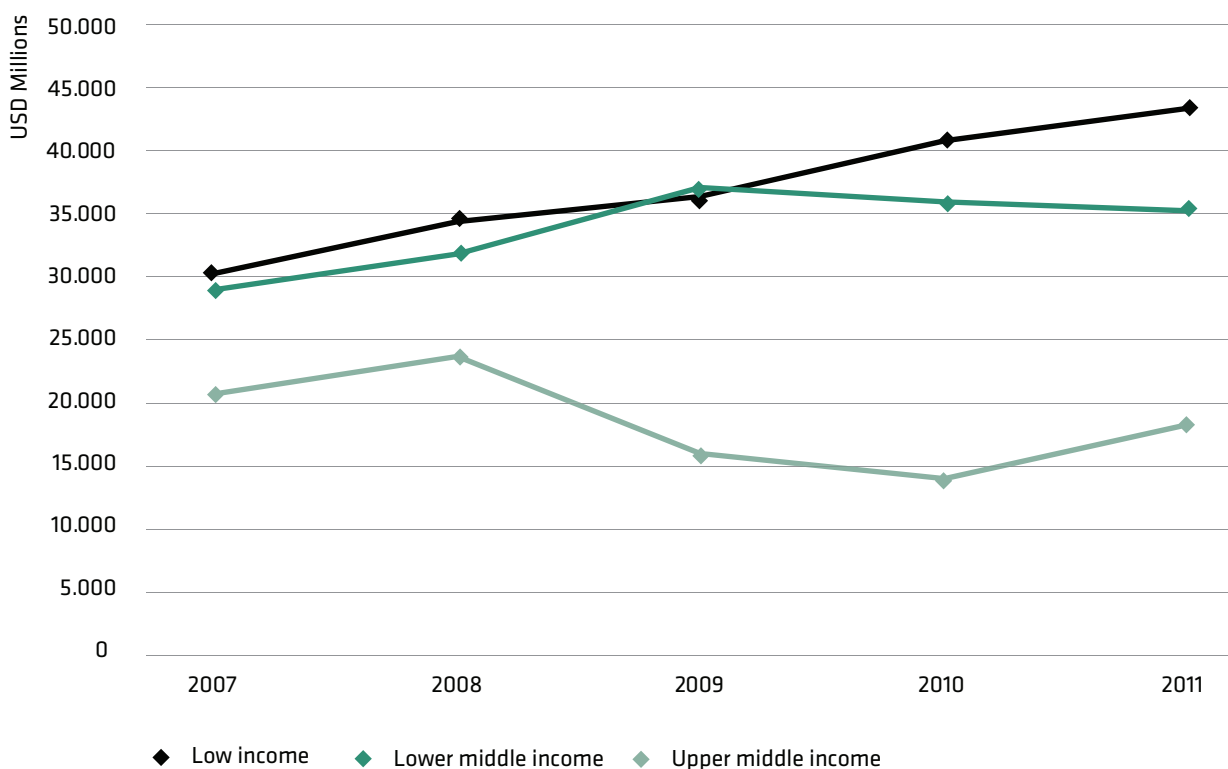

5.1 Historical context

The period is marked by the economic international crisis that spreads from the US in 2008. This profound economic crisis, from which the international economy is still suffering, has been harder on developed countries. This contraction of their economies has had multiple consequences, the most relevant to this study is the reduction of the aid destined to developing countries. The year after the start of the crisis, 2009, 17 out of the 27 DAC²⁰ member countries reduced their net ODA compared to the ODA in 2008²¹. If the recipients of ODA are grouped according to their income level as shown in graph n.4, a decreasing tendency on the received ODA can be observed for Middle Income Countries, especially for Upper Middle Income Countries, in the years of the crisis. It is important to take into account and highlight that there are 103 countries in the Middle Income Countries category, 48 of which qualify as Lower Middle Income Countries²².

Alternatively, the economic crisis has not affected developing countries with the same intensity. Looking into the evolution of the gross national income of developing countries, as seen in graph n.5, it is clear that it has kept on growing for the last four years. However it is important to outline that this growth has not been similar for all regions: in Latin America and the Caribbean, Europe and Central Asia, it has slowed down.

These conditions, on the one hand the reduction of the aid to Middle Income Countries and on the other hand the constant economic growth of developing countries, have fostered not only an economic increase of South-South Cooperation but also its stronger international impact. This interest and growth is not only encouraged by developing countries but also by developed countries that have shown interest in supporting this method, either through Triangular Cooperation or through regional schemes.

5.2 Debate forums on South-South Cooperation

The main issues of this period are mostly the need to learn about this cooperation method by sharing and exchanging experiences. There is a constant demand for more dialogue spaces and platforms to foster exchange. The interest in hearing new experiences shows the need for better information systems to be able to register more data in a more complete way. It is also in this period that the participating countries in this type of cooperation strive to establish indicators of South-South Cooperation and Triangular Cooperation that would allow its quantification and evaluation.

South-South Cooperation is consolidated in important spaces such as the DCF, forums related to development financing, the dialogue spaces within the ACP and the forums of Middle Income Countries and Least Developed Countries. Meanwhile, other relevant spaces such as the DAC of the OECD that had previously shown interest in South-South Cooperation by tackling it in debates on international cooperation, will not look into it nor conduct events on South-South and Triangular Cooperation until these last years.

It is also interesting to analyse the formation of new forums of a multilateral nature, as the G20, that has taken over the relevance and prominence of the G8. Although it started in 2008 with many countries already engaged in South-South Cooperation as its members (as the BRICS, Mexico and Argentina), it did not consider South-South Cooperation in the debates until the 2010 Seoul Summit.

DIAGRAM 6

Introduction of South-South Cooperation in Aid Effectiveness and Development Financing Forums

SOURCE: From Xalma and Lopez (2013)

Tons of workshops and seminars on the Effectiveness Agenda have taken place between the Accra Forum (2008), when South-South Cooperation was included for the first time, and the next and last High Level Forum in Busan (2011). They have been closely associated with the Nairobi Conference (2009) and the High Level Event in Bogota (2010). An important number of these seminars and workshops has been promoted by the Task Team on South-South Cooperation. The Team, supported by the Working Party on Aid Effectiveness (WP-EFF) of the Development Aid Committee (DAC) and led by Colombia and Indonesia, completed the greatest compilation of successful experiences on South-South and Triangular Cooperation in various regions.

The insertion of South-South Cooperation issues on Aid Effectiveness and Development Financing debates can be seen in diagram number 6.

As far as Development Financing is concerned, South-South Cooperation was already included in 2002 in its final declaration, but not so for debates on Aid Effectiveness, that did not include South-South Cooperation until 2008.

The IV High Level Forum on Aid Effectiveness generated many events before and after it. Some of the South-South Cooperation inputs presented in the event originated from previous regional meetings and activities in other platforms, as it can be seen in diagram n. 7. In several cases, regional positions taken to the event highlighted South-South Cooperation and Triangular Cooperation, as did the position presented by the Ibero-American area.

Furthermore, the HLF of Busan not only considered South-South Cooperation members in the principles approved in the event (although in a discretionary way), but also promoted the formation of several Building-Blocks, one of them specialized in South-South Cooperation, and the start of the Post Busan Interim Group (PBIG), that in turn initiated the Global Alliance for the Effective Cooperation on Development.

As for the various institutions of the UN, more and more of them give a special treatment to this type of cooperation, as it is the case of ILO, FAO, UNCTAD, ECOSOC, WIPO, UNIDO and UNICEF among others.

Finally, it is worth stressing the existence of other events encouraged unilaterally by different countries, independently from other spaces and regional or interregional institutions. This is the case of several workshops and seminars registered here and organized by countries such as Japan, Germany, Honduras, Uruguay or El Salvador. Japan and Germany are two of the developed countries with more experience, more active and more interested on the continuity of Triangular Cooperation. Honduras, Uruguay and El Salvador are developing countries becoming more active on South-South Cooperation on both donor and recipient roles.

It can be understood that the definition process, evolution, tactics and claims on South-South Cooperation are assembled at different stages that feedback one another, to finally introduce it at the highest level of international forums. This feedback process can be outlined as a jointed mechanism in which every piece pushes the next one into motion, as shown in diagram number 8.

5.3 Regional Analysis

At a regional level, the activity in Latin America is to be highlighted, not only for the events supported by the TT-SSC, but also for the activity of the Ibero-American Programme for the Strengthening of South-South Cooperation. This Programme regularly organizes workshops, seminars and dialogue spaces specifically on South-South Cooperation. It is not only a place to improve South-South Cooperation but it becomes a dialogue space on other issues as well. This was demonstrated in the preparation of a joint position of 19 Ibero-American countries in the framework of the XXI Ibero-American Summit, taken to the IV HLF in Busan. The distinction between South-South Cooperation and North-South Cooperation was stressed in this joint position, as well as the fact that North-South Cooperation could not and should not be replaced by South-South Cooperation. The need for democratization and opening of the structures and

The feedback process of South-South Cooperation claims mechanisms of international development cooperation was also emphasized. The principles and criteria of South-South Cooperation identified in the region were explained and more support was claimed. Moreover, the petition to maintain international cooperation for Middle Income Countries was once again put forward, as it had already been done for several years in the Ibero-American Summits.

A South-South Cooperation portal in SELA was opened so as to favour exchange of experiences. SELA had already consolidated South-South Cooperation inside its annual meeting of cooperation directors. Due to the integrationist attitude reinforced in the last decade, CELAC emerges powerfully in this last period, and becomes a possible important framework for South-South Cooperation in the region.

At a bilateral level, some facts can be highlighted, as the eagerness of countries such as Germany to meet, improve and increase its Triangular Cooperation with Latin America and the Caribbean through several workshops and seminars.

Regarding the African continent, Brazil increases its efforts towards the region as proved by the establishment of the South-South Cooperation Trust Fund (March 2011) managed by the African Development Bank. In this continent, the Africa Platform for Development Effectiveness (APDEV, July 2010) is formed and South-south Cooperation becomes one of its key issues.

Regarding the Asian continent, besides hosting various workshops promoted by the TT-SSC, the activity on South-South Cooperation continues in forums such as the SAARC and the ASEAN. Even so, there is a smaller systematization, organization and broadcasting of events such as seminars and workshops, and the great importance and impact of purely bilateral relationships for the region is also worth considering.
